Gen. Sternberg Says Dr. Forwood, Who Makes Out That Soldiers Were in Elysium and Not in a Deserated Spot as Related.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Dr. Forwood continued his testimony before the war investigating commission today concerning conditions at Montauk Point, where he was chief army surgeon.

He said that from the beginning to the end of the history of the general hospital at Camp Wikoff there was never a time when there was not from fifty to 500 vacant beds. Many patients were sent away to hospitals in neighboring cities, largely in response to public clamor. The patients knew when they were in hospital cases and were selected chiefly because it was believed not wise to send typhoid cases to convalescents at Montauk.

Another reason was the necessity of extending the hospital accommodations. During the first thirty days of the history of the camp 8,000 patients were treated and it was from them out of the question to take care of them all in the camp hospitals.

Speaking of the nurses, he said there was a sufficient number of hospital corps men who had been trained in the short hospital schools established at Montauk
